To be read before Maggid begins:

The Passover Haggadah asks us to imagine ourselves as having personally been delivered from Egypt — to quite literally see ourselves in the story. This year, as we recount the Israelites’ journey from despair to hope, and from constriction to a moment of new possibilities, let us lift up the voices of the Jews of Ukraine.

On February 24th, I knew it was time to act. I said, “I can’t stay at home. Let’s do something. Let’s deliver something. I can’t drive, but I’ll learn.”

At first, there were just three to four of us; later, other volunteers joined. And in a month, it was a well-organized process with its headquarters at the JDC-supported Beit Grand Jewish Community Center (JCC). More than a year later, we’re still here, delivering food and offering emotional support to those who need it.

Passover is about freedom — and volunteerism is the same. Volunteering is freedom of action: You do what you want. If you like chatting, you keep someone company; if you’re good at crafts, you make something with your hands; if you love children, you run a children’s program.

JDC has been, and is, our support. It has given me the opportunity to help my community, and it always supported all of my ideas.

We young people need to volunteer because we are the future. When I see my friends — friends who don’t talk, but act — I see that life’s worth living if I can have them by my side.

Together, we’ll move mountains.

Mykolaiv is my hometown, and I can still see it now — it’s straight, wide streets. When the crisis began, we were horrified. For the first seven months, there was no drinking water. And as winter approached, there was no heating — our apartment was freezing.

That’s when we turned to JDC, who helped us arrive safely in Chișinău and establish a new life.
When I’m out and about here in Chișinău, I get lost so easily — my daughter literally leads me by the hand. “Mom, do not walk over there,” she says. “There are cars over there, be careful.”

“Someday I’ll be led like this, too,” she says. That’s how life goes.

Conflict is nothing new to me. My father died in the Second World War, and my family suffered. Now we’re in the midst of another kind of crisis.

Life is now divided between before and after. We’ll never have the life we had before. But the main thing is to keep your spirit, to love and appreciate your family — and clear skies.

I just want to return home. And I want to thank all those who help us. We say that all G-d’s children are our brothers — I count JDC among them.

Everything should be mutual. If people help me, I should help them back. I’ll do anything I can to help. And since February 24th of last year, my life has come full circle. I’m an internally displaced person (IDP) now providing assistance to other IDPs.

When the crisis began, I opened my home to those fleeing conflict. I kept them company and gave them food. If they needed to shower, sleep, or eat — no problem. Whatever was needed, I gave it to them.

What is the highest form of tzedakah (charitable giving)? You can’t just give someone something; you have to provide them with a job so that they can be independent. You have to help them feel free. JDC gave me all of this. I live thanks to JDC.

Years ago, when I came to Lviv, the first thing I asked was whether there was a JDC-supported Hesed social welfare center here. JDC welcomed us well and connected my daughter Vera and me to case managers. Then I asked whether the Hesed choir needed a musician. They told me they had music programs. Eventually, I got a job as the ensemble head.

This past winter, me and my daughter — who’s a member of JDC’s Active Jewish Teens (AJT) program — attended a respite for Ukrainian families at Szarvas, the JDC-Lauder international Jewish summer camp in Hungary. We spent 13 magical days at Szarvas, and my daughter made so many new friends: It was just what we needed. And at the end of the program, we all sang together.

Music is our life. When we sing, the music helps us with everything. It’s impossible to overcome anything if you don’t have optimism in your soul, in your music.

We have to believe in goodness, sing, and keep going.
A Special Reading for the Jews of Ukraine
PASSOVER 2023 SUPPLEMENT

To be read after we raise the matzah the first time:

This is not only the bread of our affliction, but also the lechem oni, the bread of those in dire need.

It’s called that because of its purposeful lack of ingredients — only unleavened flour and water, nothing to make it rise, and it must be baked in haste — the food of those with nothing, those who’ve left everything, in desperate need of a miracle.

It is the bread we took with us when we rushed out of Egypt to pursue our destiny and our peoplehood — to pursue life.

Our Jewish family in Ukraine, those who fled to other countries, and needy Jews throughout the region share in the collective desire for better days.

As we hold them close to our hearts tonight, and remember them here at our seder tables, let us do all we can to support and comfort them and to build a future whose course we shape with every act of kindness.

We do this because all Jews are responsible for one another, embodying the mighty hand and outstretched arm that has delivered our people throughout time.

JDC — the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee or “The Joint” — is the leading Jewish humanitarian organization, working in 70 countries to lift lives and strengthen communities. We rescue Jews in danger, provide aid to vulnerable Jews, develop innovative solutions to Israel’s most complex social challenges, cultivate a Jewish future, and lead the Jewish community’s response to crises. For over 100 years, our work has put the timeless Jewish value of mutual responsibility into action, making JDC essential to the survival of millions of people and the advancement of Jewish life across the globe.
